Photos of the Day: Irwindale Delays Decision on Sriracha Plant

An Irwindale police officer, left, guards a door to a city council meeting, as a worker peeks holding a bottle of Sriracha hot sauce waits in the overflowed lobby in Irwindale, Calif., Wednesday, April 23, 2014. The city of Irwindale is suing the maker of Sriracha hot sauce and last week the Los Angeles suburb tentatively voted to declare the bottling plant a public nuisance. Irwindale City Attorney Fred Galante, not seen, says relocating seems extreme and the city only wants to see the smell issue addressed. (AP Photo/Damian Dovarganes)

Read: Irwindale Calls a Two-Week Truce with Sriracha Maker [1]

Irwindale Mayor Mark Breceda, right pulls out his personal bottle of Sriracha hot sauce to show his support to find a solution to Sriracha's smell issue during a city council meeting in Irwindale, Calif., Wednesday, April 23, 2014. Manuel Garcia, Irwindale Mayor Pro Tem is at left. (AP Photo/Damian Dovarganes)

Sriracha hot sauce founder David Tran vows to stay in Irwindale, Calif., as he is joined by supporters protesting ahead of the city council meeting in Irwindale, Calif., Wednesday, April 23, 2014. The Irwindale City Council has declared that the factory that produces the popular Sriracha hot sauce is a public nuisance. (AP Photo/Damian Dovarganes)

Sriracha hot sauce workers protest ahead of the city council meeting in Irwindale, Calif., Wednesday, April 23, 2014. (AP Photo/Damian Dovarganes)

Source URL (retrieved on 10/26/2014 - 3:40am):
http://www.foodmanufacturing.com/news/2014/04/photos-day-irwindale-delays-decision-sriracha-plant

Links:
[1] http://www.foodmanufacturing.com/news/2014/04/irwindale-calls-two-week-truce-sriracha-maker