

Thought of the Day: California Chill Puts the Freeze on Citrus Production

As the West Coast cold snap lingers for a fifth day, California produce farmers are growing increasingly concerned about the impact the weather may have on their crops. California's San Joaquin Valley, used to a year-round temperate climate, saw Sunday's temperatures plummet to 25 degrees. Paul Story of California Citrus Mutual says,

"It was our coldest night to date. I think mandarin growers are going to see a range of significant damage, enough that they will have to separate their crops.

[\[read more \[1\]\]](#)

Source URL (retrieved on 01/27/2015 - 10:03am):

<http://www.foodmanufacturing.com/news/2013/01/thought-day-california-chill-puts-freeze-citrus-production>

Links:

[1] <http://www.foodmanufacturing.com/news/2013/01/calif-cold-snap-damages-citrus-lettuce>